About Leonid

My everyday inspiration has always been my great grandfather, stories of whom I have heard so many times from my mother. The most treasured values that I stand for and believe in are what I gathered from those stories. He was a self-taught master artisan, famous for the quality of his work and highest level of craftsmanship in silver and iron. It takes a heart of great passion to learn the true essence of material to become a self taught blacksmith. He had to practically reinvent many techniques of the craft and experiment with materials, shape and patterns to achieve the quality he was striving for. I feel that we share the same passion and a similar life path.

Studying at Saint Martins in London allowed me to explore my creative style. I worked for several years on developing my own unique style and like my great-grandfather studying old techniques and precious metals. I translated them into works of gold, pearls and gemstones. My Fine jewellery collections are handcrafted to honour tradition and interpret soul of the modern world.

Design story

Every design has its own story behind it. Here is a story of the Eternity bracelet.

On a very special occasion my mother found a small pearl hidden in the shell of an oyster and asked me to interpret it in the design of a bracelet. This bracelet is inspired by her story and allows to wear a gemstone or pearl that is meaningful and dear to heart hidden from others eyes.
